Is it Only a Coincident.

In the almost universal demand and desire for the repeal of the Sherman law as a preliminary to an adjustment of monetary affairs, there are one or two facts which ought not to be lost sight of.

The present is an industrial and coin when it rained, and it did not need it during dry weather, is about as reason able as the excuse of another man who went around setting pans under the leaks in the roof, and then claimed that roofs were a failure, because, no matter how many pans he used, the roof still was leaky. And both illustrate the actual condition of the so-called improvement of the Missouri river by the government. When the river is cutting they can't stop it. And when it is not single egg in an oblong sht about one—Ouite a number from facts which ought not to be best sight of an early and commercial as well as a financial crisis. Long before any general demand was heard for the repeal of the Sherman law the prevailing ere of depression had set in.

The great need of the hour is a restoration of public confidence. When did the loss of public and private confidence. When did the base of public and private confidence with the stability of the prevailing prosperity first show itself? It began with the announcement of Democratic national success has fail, and it was no diagrance on or common sense about it, than there diagrance operation within a month of affirm a month of Mr. Cleveland's inauguration.
